ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First I would like to give praises to the almighty God who created human beings in his own image and gave them wisdom to rule over other creatures on earth and to interact with one another in effectively and efficiently utilizing the resources for the improvement of their lives.

Special thanks go to my supervisor at the University of Limpopo, Professor D.G. Kirov who patiently guided my work during the whole period of study. Your support and patience triggered enormous energy that motivated me to complete this dissertation.

Thank you to Mr. L.J Marimane of Housing and Building Inspection department in Polokwane Municipality: who opened his door to me when I knocked and requested the relevant official documentation, as well as the relevant contact people for the purpose of this study.

I am indebted to my language editor Mr. A. Thomas for his dedication in editing my work. Your efforts are highly appreciated and support immeasurable.

My special thanks go to Professor M.D.M. Makofane. Your words of encouragement sparked the urge to move until this dissertation was complete.

Thanks also to Mr. V. Gelebe; for proof reading my work.

Thanks to Statistic South Africa (Limpopo region) GIS and population department for all their efforts for compiling and issuing the map for the purpose of this study. Lastly, I thank my fellow students (Chauke G.T, Maponyane P, and Matjekane N.C.) for their encouragement and support.
DEDICATION

I dedicate this dissertation to all rural communities in the Limpopo Province who are involved in poverty alleviation projects in a quest to change the lives of poor people for the better. Beside documented information consulted while researching, I would like to acknowledge the contribution of various people who made this work a success.

Further, I would also like to dedicate this dissertation to my uncle (Mhlongo M.T), My daughter (Shalati), My Son (Vusi) and the entire family for their undisputed support throughout this study.

ABSTRACT

Apartheid land policy and its constitution as a whole conceptualized and structured South African in a way that encouraged inequalities in terms of land ownership, job opportunities and access to education and recreational facilities. The privileged few (whites and a few black elites and whosoever summarized with the former apartheid regime) got richer and richer while the less privileged people, (in this case, the majority of the black people of South Africa) got poor. They were even denied reasonable access to land and quality education. This investigative study examines the state in which they lived and how they are still living in Squatter Camp as an attempt to make qualitatively justifiable recommendations.

Informal settlement is as old as the origin of urban settlement, which existed through industrialization process worldwide. A need for peace, jobs, security, housing and land ownership resulted in the establishment of informal settlement near big towns and mines. The most disadvantaged people, those characterized by poverty due to unemployment, lack of land ownership due to one reason or another move to informally settle nearer to areas in which there are possibilities for employment opportunities and better standard of living.

Specifically, this study examines the deficiencies associated with the existing informal settlement through its assessment and evaluation. In this regard all aspects of assessment techniques of the way in which inhabitants of Disteneng informal settlement live i.e. interviewing processes (both structured and informal), observation through site visit, checking of documented information with regard to informal settlement etc have been used. The gaps that exist between urban life and the living conditions of people from squatter camp have been investigated and reflected.
The focus of the argument in this study is that the less job opportunities and access to land that people have, the more they live in squalid conditions and move to towns in search of work.

This means that the problems they face have to be addressed positively and effectively by the relevant departments of South African Government. Alternative well-serviced living conditions have to be developed and provided to these people (people living in Disteneng squatter camp). Timeously, the department of housing should take statistics of the number of people who are without houses and employment as well as those who are illiterate, so as to develop better responsive policies for addressing these problems before they are out of control.

As a mean of addressing these problems the life in Disteneng squatter camp has been investigated. The results from the data analysis, including the views of the inhabitants of Disteneng squatter camp have been reflected and recommendations were spelt out in the last chapter of this study.
